EVOC Training Vehicles Needed

POST is in need of EVOC training vehicles. Specifically we are looking for Crown Victoria's and/ or Chargers. Vehicles should be in fair shape with no major mechanical issues. If any agency has any leads on patrol vehicles now, or in the near future please contact Adam Houle at (775) 687-3314, or email at ahoule@post.state.nv.us. Any help is greatly appreciated.

Management Program

POST is in the process of up-dating all of its programs. The current Management program is undergoing an update. Anyone that has started taking the modules are encouraged to complete the program during the 2018 calendar year. We will be changing the Independent modules and books so that information in the books can be better used in the classroom setting.

The incongruity of law enforcement readiness

By T.O Schinzing

Officers should be in top physical condition throughout their career in order to remain safe on the job and after the job. Physical readiness to perform the job of a peace officer is a prerequisite for POST certification and the importance of maintaining physical fitness is required by the training of every cadet from the first day at the academy.

So, why do so many officers fail to keep up the physical condition they achieved at academy graduation until the day they retire? Cadets train for many hours during their academy enduring many different types of exercises, training challenges, and extreme weather. The truth is there are so many peace officers who leave the academy in good condition, but do not continue to exercise and work out. Many officers become complacent over time yet still believe they can keep themselves and the public safe.

Sadly as the years go by, and their fitness degrades, they find themselves unable to meet the challenges and stresses of many of the situations they might encounter later on in their careers. An officer should always be able to protect the public as they had sworn under oath "to serve and protect." A peace officer who has not maintained physical conditioning as required by the job will not be able to handle many situations they encounter. An officer may need to chase a suspect on foot who has committed a crime, and have the ability to physically overcome any physical resistance, restrain, and ultimately control the person in custody. Not only will officers have to use their physical strength and cardio, they must also be able to withstand the stressful and dangerous situations of the many on duty threats encountered. In the public eye, when a citizen sees a peace officer on the street, this officer represents and projects the image of the entire force. A well-conditioned officer can send the right message to the community and more importantly, criminals as well. Contrarily, an officer whom is obviously out of shape may invite the very thing he or she has not prepared for a physical conflict.

Just as brushing your teeth before seeing the dentist does not work. The same incongruous belief that being in a police uniform will solve any conflict. The bottom line for all officers is to remember that it is vital to be ready for anything at any time, not only for his or her own safety, but also for those they work with and those they serve.
